JUST WHAT EVERYBODY IS AFRAID OF HOW IT HAPPENED AT LAST

A Tiger that Actually Did Break Out of
His Cage at the Circus and What Happened Then.

WHAT everybody has long expected has at last come to pass.

You have never visited a menagerie of wild beasts without picturing to yourself just such a frightful scene as that in which life was torn from the body of little Ruth Rosell, at Twin Falls, Idaho.

There is a special fascination about the cage which contains the great, fierce, beautiful, royal Bengal tiger. All about its iron-barred front the fascinated, yet fearful, crowd pauses—men and women and little children. As you watch the sullen beast crouching and pacing restlessly about the confines of his prison you shudder for yourself and are appalled at the contrast between the savage strength of the beast and the tender weakness of the children separated from him only by some slender iron bars.

You have heard the beast snarl, his great teeth bared, his eyes blazing vengeance at the spectators of his humiliation. You have seen him dash in desperate anger at the bars so that the cage shakes, and the great, sharp claws protrude inches from their sheaths. Terrified, you start back with the crowd, saying to yourself:

"What if the bars should break? Why, one stroke of that great paw with its bared talons would strip a grown man's arm to the bone."

Because you cannot remember that a tiger has burst through the bars of his cage does not lessen your apprehensions.

"Some day it will happen," you say—and it has. Just such a crowd was gathered before the cage of the royal Bengal tiger of the Bella menagerie at Twin Falls, Idaho—men and women and little children. In the front rank were Mrs. E. E. Rosell, and her pretty little daughter Ruth, six years old.

The sight of the great beast frightened the child, but she was fascinated, too. She kept tight hold of her mother's hand, and looked and looked.

Now it happened on that day that "Markie" and "Agnes"—so the tiger and his mate were called—were restless and in a bad temper. They were not quiet for a moment. They snarled viciously at the spectators and lashed their tails. This was unusual. Three little Shetland ponies which some children were petting within a few feet of the front of the cage were visibly disturbed about it. They showed the whites of their eyes and backed as far away from the cage as their halters would permit them to.

It was feeding time for the lions and tigers, and the crowd of spectators grew thicker, eager to see the beasts devour the big chunks of meat and bone to be thrown to them.

"There it comes!" said some one in the crowd.

At the same instant the royal Bengal tiger caught sight of the man with the meat. This was the signal for all his smoldering passions to burst forth. With a frenzied snarl the enormous creature leaped at the iron-barred door of his cage. His terrible paws, toes separated, long, powerful, sharp claws gleaming, beat upon the bars and shook them.

The crowd surged back in terror—and it was well for many that it did so, for the long-anticipated was actually happening.

The iron bars bent like willow withes under the paws of the enraged and powerful beast. He seemed to understand that this meant liberty and living prey. He dashed his whole weight at the bars. The ends were forced out of their sockets!

A gasp of horror went up from the spectators as the barred door fell outward with a clatter and a hairy, yellow streak flew a dozen feet to the back of a shrieking pony.

While the crowd struggled, panic-stricken, to get away, a keeper, with a bar of iron was beating the escaped tiger over the head. Startling it toward the back of another pony, killing it as it had the first. Beaten again by the keeper, it leaped upon the third pony—while the crowd grew denser in its efforts to get out of the tent.

Nearest to the tiger, among the struggling men, women and children, were little Ruth Rosell and her mother. Close beside them was J. W. Bell, a blacksmith of the town, who was shielding with his body his own children, being unable to escape with them.

This brave blacksmith was the hero to whom many owed their escape from the tiger's claws and teeth, for he was beaten from the back of the third pony, was crouching as though for a leap into the midst of the nearest group of human beings. He drew a revolver from his pocket.

But the tiger had already leaped.

Poor little Ruth Rosell was directly in his path. The mother, clasping the child's hand in hers, saw that which she will not forget to her dying day—a huge, infuriated tiger in midair, mouth open, white fangs gleaming, great sharp hooks of claws disengaged, lunging straight at her breast where she clasped her child.

One paw felled the mother, but the other and the weight of the beast bore down the child. At that instant the blacksmith got his revolver out. His children behind him, he was not three feet away from where little Ruth lay with the beast's claws in her breast. He fired in the tiger's face.

The beast winced and snarled. The blacksmith fired again and again. The tiger left his dying prey and snarled a dreadful menace. The blacksmith never wavered. Straight into the beast's belting front he poured the two remaining bullets. The tiger turned and fled toward one of the entrances.

The blacksmith followed, reloading as he went. Once more the beast—now maddened by pain—charged the crowd. Blacksmith Bell met him with two more bullets. Those were enough. The tiger limped toward the main entrance—now free of spectators—and suddenly fell down dead, with six bullets in him.

Is Pretty Maude Fealy A Little Goose?

"When the Meddlesome Mother Went Into Hysterics Over Her Marriage She Should Have Said 'Mind Your Own Business, Mamma!' Instead of Throwing Over Her Husband and Cruelly Writing Him to Please 'Call It All Off.'" ---Says Beatrice Fairfax.

MAUDE FEALY is a little goose, that which worried itself on his own domestic skyline. No young woman of good sense will fly into hysterics one day to please her own whim, and then fly out of her marriage the next day to please her mother's whim. Maude Fealy should not have married Mr. Sherwin unless she knew her story. Her mind was serious and earnest in her determination to be a true and worthy wife. Once having married Mr. Sherwin it was her duty to stick to him, and the Bible says, "Wives, submit your hearts for the Lord, as the church submits herself to Christ, who is her head, as his body, which he saves with his blood, and himself to glorify her." If she did not love the man she married, she should have said, "Mind your own business, mamma!" instead of throwing over her husband and cruelly writing him to please "Call it all off."

But pretty Maude Fealy didn't do it. She dealt to the mother who has watched over her, as though lack of wit and duty, but when it comes to the question of marriage she had matrimonial middle. Miss Fealy, also owns a great deal to her husband. She, as Mr. Sherwin, as she now is, is said to be the youngest star on the stage. Twenty-three may be young for a star, but it is not especially juvenile for a wife, and the young woman is certainly old enough to know better. Her behavior has been exceedingly childish and undignified.

Maude Fealy is a charming young woman and a capable actress. She was at one time leading woman for Henry B. Waltham, and that fact alone would have been sufficient for her ability.

On July 15 she married Mr. Hugo Louis Sherwin, the dramatic critic of the Denver Republican.

She married him presumably because as a woman she does as an actress she loved him. Certainly she did not marry him to please her mother. The young people were married, the country going off, and he and his wife, who were the wedding guests, were both sworn to secrecy.

But could be no respecter of secrets, and some way or other the story leaked out.

And then Miss Fealy's mamma, who never had been taken into the young people's confidence, started forward and began to play the leading part.

Newer, I venture to say, had Mr. Sherwin's mother, had she been taken into the young people's confidence, started forward and began to play the leading part.

been self-supporting for many years, and it was natural that she should feel more or less independent in the matter. Most of the girls who read this story have heard of Maude Fealy. They know of her as a beautiful, successful young woman, and perhaps have had thrills of envy over her fame and adulation. But she has been a miserable failure in this one great, important matter, matrimony.

Try and learn something from this matrimonial fiasco, girls. Don't marry unless you are mighty sure that you love the man. But when you do marry leave to your husband through good report and ill. He should and must be a helpmate as well as a wife. Never forget your duty to your mother, but after marriage the man you have given your whole love to must come first.

There is no reason why your love for your husband and your love for your mother should ever clash. You can love each one dearly, but in quite different ways.

Your duty to your husband is to be tender and faithful and considerate, turning to him first and last, in time of joy or tribulation.

And in order to live up to this you must be very sure that you are marrying a man whom you both love and respect. Remember this lesson, little girls, and when you can't be better women and wives when your turn comes, than Maude Fealy, possibly, has managed to be.

Waterman's Ideal

Fountain Pen

Skilled Labor Has Made Me

I am Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen—the Pen with the Clip-Cap—like Pen, that never leaks—the Pen that never fails.

I have been made by skilled labor, and I am a daily reminder that the American workman is the best mechanic in the world. Fifty years ago I did not exist, because at that period workmen were not skilful enough to create me.

I am one of a million brothers, and they are all like me. Before we leave our birthplace a Waterman workman examines us for competency, and only those who pass his close inspection go out into the world. We are all made of the best rubber, and gold of the finest temper, and we are put together by skilled labor.

We can be found in every nook and corner of the world. The war correspondent in Manchuria, writes his dispatches with a Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen; the business man in New York or Chicago keeps one handy in his pocket (held by the faithful Clip-Cap); the captain of the seafaring tramp steamer, plodding through the South Seas, writes his ship's log with a Waterman; the dainty schoolgirl, writing to her chum, uses the handy little Waterman that Uncle Tom gave her last Christmas; and with a Waterman the minister indites his sermons, the drummer writes his reports, and the grocer's clerk inscribes his orders.

I am a success because I am the best of my kind. I have been made to last for years, to write well, and never get out of order—and the Clip-Cap has been invented to keep me in your pocket. The Clip-Cap holds me wherever you put me, whether in your coat or vest pocket, or clipped to the front of your negligee shirt. You'll see a picture of the Clip-Cap on the pen shown on the top of this advertisement.

I am sold at different prices, depending on style and size, but the prices range from $2.50, $3.50, $4.00, $5.00 and upwards.

I can be found at the address of almost any good dealer in any town or city.

LABOR DAY

It Is the Holiday of All Useful Men and Women. FOR THEY ALL LABOR

SINCE the beginning of written history—and long before that—men have set aside certain days for rejoicing, idleness. Such days have been named in honor of "great men"—birthdays of kings, queens, etc. There have been holidays in honor of various religious beliefs, holidays to celebrate battles in which tens of thousands have been killed. Holidays to celebrate miracles and to commemorate rebellion against tyranny.

The holiday in honor of labor is a new holiday. It is as recent as the idea that labor is DESERVING of honor.

The day of labor will remain from now on the great holiday of the human race. All human beings are not agreed as to their religious holidays, their holidays for great men, their patriotic holidays. BUT ALL ARE AGREED THAT ONE DAY MUST BE SET APART IN HONOR OF LABOR.

WE HAVE COME A LONG DISTANCE FROM THE TIME WHEN THE RULERS OF THE WORLD FELT THAT THE CONDITION OF LABOR SHOULD BE EMPHASIZED BY WORK EVERY DAY AND AS MUCH AS POSSIBLE EVERY NIGHT.

This holiday of labor is one of many features and developments of modern life that should encourage the despondent.

Labor Day is the day of all the citizens that gives something in return for the living that they get from the earth and from their fellow-men.

It is not merely a day of celebration for those that work with their hands; it is especially the day of the intelligent man whose labor combines hands and brain. It is a day that belongs to all but the parasites, those that in their youth live without working. Fortunately they are becoming fewer and fewer in numbers.

In this day those that are too old to work join in celebration with the young that are working still. And those that are still too young to work, and that should NOT work, see in labor's demonstration a protection against child labor, the constantly growing recognition of the rights of the human being, AS A human being.

The greatest thing, the only great thing in the world, really, is LABOR—WHETHER IT BE LABOR OF THE MUSCLES ONLY, OF THE MIND AND MUSCLES, OR OF THE THINKING BRAIN ALONE.

Everything in this world that we admire is a monument to patient labor. The heavy pyramids, the great canals, the cities that dot the earth, the railroads and steamships that connect them, the thousands of miles of electric wires, factories, homes, pavements, sewers, orderly farms—all tell of labor well done.

The truth in all its forms, astronomical, scientific, mathematical, owe to labor and to HARD LABOR. For there is no labor so hard as fighting untruth, and discovering the truth.

All over this country the hosts of labor will parade to-morrow. They will pass through many miles of tall trees, THAT THEY HAVE BUILT. They will be cheered by tens of thousands, WHOSE CLOTHES, SHOES, SHIRTS THEY HAVE MADE. They will be cheered by hosts of children, WHOM THEIR LABOR FEEDS.

Labor is coming into its own, control and ownership of the earth, and by LABOR we mean the work that men do, digging, building, digging, or thinking.

The hodcarrier and the architect are alike, laborers. And this is their day.

Of the men that work, many millions will think to-day of to-morrow's celebration and its meaning. We hope that in their minds there will be an earnest study of human conditions as a whole, and of their own individual possibilities of improvement.

A part of the Labor Day celebration deals with the "shorter day of work for many men." It is to be hoped that those that have cut out four hours from the work of the body WILL ADD AT LEAST TWO HOURS, OR ONE HOUR TO THE WORK OF THE BRAIN, giving up that time to study.

It is to be hoped that those who by union have succeeded in getting more money will use the greater part of that increased pay for the women and children that depend upon them, and in better treatment of those less fortunate than themselves.

A shorter day and bigger pay mean little, unless they mean better brains and happier families at the end of the year. Men who enjoy better conditions now should realize what they owe to self-sacrificing men in the past. And they should be determined to do for the future as much as the past has done for them.

This newspaper wishes to all the honest workers of the country, their wives and their children, a happy Labor Day of rest, fellowship, useful recreation and thought.

It is a day to make men feel hopeful, a day to remind us of the wonderful progress the first progress of the human mind has made. There is no going back. Each year and each century are better than the times gone before. Charles Snyder, in his "The World Machine," paints briefly and graphically the picture of progress.

The steady advance of civilization, often slow, often halted, but ever renewed; the progress of science, the amelioration of savage and brutal customs, the abolition of slavery, the wide diffusion of material comforts, of justice and of peace—in larger phrase, the broadening of the human mind, the heightening of the human consciousness.

Instead of the mood of Volney's ruins we have that of Macaulay's pagan upon the Bacchanian philosophy; instead of disenchantment, a buoyant and invigorating sense of things done, of progress and attainment.

Look around upon the modern world, with its wealth, its broadened humanism, its beautiful cities, the ease of displacement, its universal culture, its patronage of science, the arts, the embellishment of labor, and consider, then, that a few centuries ago our immediate forbears, the inhabitants of Great Britain and of the German forests, were painted and tattooed savages, who dwelt in huts of wattle and lived largely by the chase. The Britons who met the invasion of Roman arms died their bodies with blue woad; the Scots who resisted Agricola "fought naked with short spears."

Consider that so late as the Norman Conquest, in the eleventh century, the selling of men and women into slavery was a general custom in all parts of England.

You might have seen with sorrow long files of young people, of both sexes and of the greatest beauty, bound with ropes and daily exposed for sale. So runs the word of a contemporary chronicler; and for these were not captives of another race, not blacks nor prisoners of war, but their nearest relatives and even their own children.

'HERE IS THE AVERAGE MAN'

ANY Americans looking at this picture will say, "That is I."

Many more will say, more emphatically, "That is ME."

When a man has ground at his task for a certain number of days, months and years, he begins to ask himself what he is doing and WHY he is doing it. He notices that he gets older and slower, and that the machine at which he works, whether it be a pen, a typewriter, a plow, a ribbon counter or a lathe, it is always just hard to work, always calls for the same amount of strength.

All of us, big and little, rich and poor, miserable or supposedly happy, are fastened to a treadmill and JUST work, whether we want to or not.

This earth itself is a great treadmill, whirling round and round majestically, and we little insects, fastened to its surface by gravitation, are tied down here and have got to work in some way or other in spite of ourselves.

The baby opens its feeble eyes in the cradle to find itself working its little arms and legs in SPIRIT OF ITSELF.

The child runs and plays, the little girl works at her dolls preparing for future motherhood, and the little boy works at various kinds of effort that forecast his future work.

The old man works often harder than the young, because of his interest in children or grandchildren and his anxiety about them.

Each of us has his treadmill, for even the man who gives up his life to vice and self-indulgence is the victim of powers stronger than himself, and his treadmill is one of the most horrible and most painful.

This article is written for the man in the picture—THE AVERAGE MAN WORKING VERY HARD EVERY DAY AND GETTING VERY LITTLE.

He imagines that if he could get off that treadmill and use his effort in his own way his life would be better and more useful.

It may comfort him very little to know it, but he is probably wrong.

In some countries they do the churning by dog-power. The dog is in a treadmill. He toils and toils, always in the same place, tail down, tongue hanging out, eyes sad. He thinks he is wasting time and that he ought to be chasing rabbits—and so he ought, if we all had our rights. But as the world is now organized he is needed, and he is doing the best possible work where he is.

There is a belt fastened to the wheel in his treadmill; that belt moves a churn, the churn makes butter, the butter makes money and health.

Every man's treadmill has a belt fastened to it, visible or invisible, and that belt runs some machine or helps to run some machine that makes bread.

Tens of thousands of little men

"He Thinks His Life Is Wasted, but It Is Not Wasted"

"Look at the World's Bright Side. It Is Just as Easy"

are tied up in the treadmill of some great industry. They are building up that industry, supplying the world to-day, and helping to free men of the future from a treadmill life.

Millions of men work patiently, steadily and monotonously in millions of difficult treadmills that might be labelled "THE SUPPORT OF A FAMILY."

Their youth begins with enthusiasm. Courtship and marriage come, and gradually they settle down into the dull, daily grind, relieved and rewarded only by their love for their wives and children. Such men, very often, as they plod bravely out without any real idea of giving up, ask themselves if it is worth while, and if they would not have done better to stay free.

To each one the task that he is doing seems trivial and unworthy. But among them all they are doing the greatest work in the world.

They are keeping children in school.

They are giving to the earth a better generation of men and women to follow this one. They are the great army of patient, self-denying men, working unknown and unappreciated, for a generation to come. The world doesn't recognize them individually now, and it will not in the future. Neither will it recognize in the future the self-indulgent man who now seems and who feels so important.

Almost everyone of us human beings living in dull fashion, doing the same thing day after day, rebels at times. Not a day passes in this country without ten millions of men asking themselves if life is worth while.

Worth while or not isn't the question. We can't jump off this earth, whether it be worth while or not to stay here—gravity prevents that. We can't leave this life whether we like it or not. Self-respect, religious faith and a compulsory force greater than either, known as "the instinct of self-preservation," keeps us here.

The best thing for us to do is to look at the bright side of the world. The picture at the bottom of this page shows two ways of contemplating this earth. The earth itself is neither bright NOR black, but the eye of the onlooker makes it so.

The little boy going home with a prize for good conduct sees a world all glided. And the little boy kept in after school for making a picture of the teacher on his slate sees a world jet black and altogether to be despised.

The growing man is only a boy looking at a black or a glided world, with rebellious eyes that do not understand, or with a mind that rises above conditions and makes the best of them.

We ought to judge ourselves as men should judge others. When this country freed itself from England and began a career that may yet lead to republican government and equality of men, a great army was necessary. Every man of that army, of course, wanted and hoped to be an officer. Every man would have liked to do the work that Washington was doing. We should not blame them for wanting to be more important. We should despise any man for refusing to do the humble work of which he was capable because he could not be made commander-in-chief.

We know that, important as Washington was, the thousands of brave men who followed him were, as a body, infinitely more important. They could have done great things, finding other leaders, perhaps, without Washington. Washington could have done nothing without them.

The fight that Washington and his followers began against bad government a little more than a hundred years ago is the same fight that the human race began against bad conditions, wild animals, awamps and savage nature tens of thousands of years ago when this earth was young.

In the great panorama of life that we call human history, a few names stand out. We see Charlemagne, the great Emperor, bringing order into European chaos after the civilization of antiquity had broken down.

We see Charles Martel keeping back Mohammedanism with its desolating effects from northwestern Europe.

We see and admire individuals, great astronomers, mathematicians, explorers. But the Power that controls this world, and that has brought the human race slowly from the dark cave to this half-way civilization, SEES ONLY MEN.

The world's work has been done by the human atoms, by the soldiers that Charlemagne left dying in the Pyrenees, by the patient, unknown watchers of the stars that came before Copernicus, Galileo and Kepler, by the nameless, half-savage Phoenicians and their distant predecessors that conquered the seas before Columbus was born.

The earth is a treadmill. And there are fourteen hundred millions of human beings fastened to it. Each has a separate little treadmill of his own. Each in his corner is doing the work that he can do, AND THAT HE MUST DO.

One side of the world is black when one side is bright. May our readers try to look always upon the bright side, patient in their hard work without losing ambition, and may many of them change their present treadmill for a bigger and heavier one that will give them a chance to do more and better work. Work is all that there is in man.

This year the pilgrimage surpassed in proportions any of the previous pilgrimages; also, for the first time on record, marriage was celebrated on the mountain by the administrator of the parish, Fr. McDonald. It is to be plausibly hoped, however, that the pair will not continue to live in the clouds.

Croughpatrick looked his best last Sunday in the occasion of the last pilgrimage. The pilgrimage started under the auspices of the parish of Tuam, the Most Rev. Dr. O'Connell, who gathered together a record

MRS. PEPPER-VANDERBILT HAS ELUDED HER PURSUERS

Many Friends in Boston Defend Noted Medium's Course in Rich Husband's Lunacy Trial.

Elizabeth Peabody, daughter of the famous Unitarian minister, is considered worth at least $200,000. Her husband, Mr. Peabody, is a wealthy merchant. Mrs. Peabody is a well-known medium and has been the subject of much speculation regarding her husband's mental condition. She has been accused of eluding her pursuers in the case of her husband's lunacy trial.

Was Expected to Speak Next Sunday
Mrs. Peabody was expected to speak at a meeting of the Boston Society of Spiritualists next Sunday. She has been the subject of much speculation regarding her husband's mental condition. She has been accused of eluding her pursuers in the case of her husband's lunacy trial.

ALL HAIL PE-RU-NA.
A Case of STOMACH CATARRH.
Miss Mary O'Brien, 200 Myrtle Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

"Peruna cured me in five weeks of catarrh of the stomach, after medicine for four years and doctoring without effect. In common with other grateful ones who have been benefited by your discovery, I say All hail to Peruna."

Mr. J. J. Henneman, Oakland, N. H., writes: "I waited before writing to you about my catarrh of the stomach, which I had over a year ago. There were people who told me it would not stay cured, but I am sure that I am cured for I do not feel any more ill effects from a good appetite and am getting fat. So I am, and will say to all, I am cured for good."

"Peruna will be of your medicine hereafter." Catarrh of the stomach is also known in common parlance as acid peptic, dyspepsia and indigestion. No medicine will be of any permanent benefit except it removes the catarrh condition.

Gained Strength and Flesh
Miss Julia Hunter, R. R. 4, Appleton, Wis., writes she had catarrh of the stomach, causing loss of sleep and appetite, with frequent severe pains of the bowels. After taking Peruna, her appetite returned, she gained strength, flesh and perfect health.

ESTHA DONAHUE LOSER BY 8 FEET

Madeleine Berlo, Seeming Winner, Takes 8 Feet

For the first time in the history of the American Cup, a woman has won the title of champion swimmer. Madeleine Berlo, of New York, defeated Estha Donahue, of Boston, by a margin of 8 feet in the 100 yard race. The race was held at the Longwood Athletic Club, and was the first of a series of events to be held there. The women's events were the only ones of the kind ever held in this country. The race was a very close one, and the result was a surprise to many of the spectators. Madeleine Berlo, who is a member of the New York Athletic Club, was the favorite to win. She had won the 100 yard race at the Longwood Athletic Club in June, and had also won the 100 yard race at the Longwood Athletic Club in July. Estha Donahue, who is a member of the Boston Athletic Club, was the favorite to win. She had won the 100 yard race at the Longwood Athletic Club in June, and had also won the 100 yard race at the Longwood Athletic Club in July.

2 MONSTER PARADES LEAD FEATURE LIST FOR LABOR'S GREAT DAY

Show Impressively Strength and Unionism of Boston's Sturdy Toilers.

10,000 C. L. U. MARCH

Three Thousand Union Workers Will Make Up Building Trades Column.

30 BANDS TO BE IN LINE

Scores of Smoke Talks and Other Attractions Fill Out Big Program.

LABOR DAY celebration tomorrow will be the most memorable Boston has ever known, and with the fair weather which is prevailing on the first Monday in September will show impressively the numerical strength and union of the American toilers who are banded together for common weal.

There will be two big parades in Boston and innumerable smoke talks and minor entertainments. One parade will be held by members of the Central Labor Union, and it is expected that 10,000 men will march under its banners, while it is believed that the marchers in the Building Trades Column parade will number not less than 3,000.

More than thirty bands have been engaged to play spirited music for the two columns and every musician in line will be a staunch union man.

Everything Non-Union Barred

Hopkins & Co. with shops, not being the Hoppers, are not to be taken in to parade in the line. It is expected that the parade will be the largest ever held in Boston, and that it will be a great success. The parade will be held at 10 o'clock, and will start from the City Hall, and will march down the city streets to the harbor.

Infinite Number of Attractions.

It will be the day for many people in Boston. There will be many attractions, and the day will be a great success. The parade will be held at 10 o'clock, and will start from the City Hall, and will march down the city streets to the harbor.

1,000 PAINTERS IN WHITE, HEAD MARCH OF BUILDING CRAFTSMEN

Although smaller in numbers, the march of the Building Trades Council will furnish many attractive features.

In dense white uniforms 1,000 members of laborers follow. It will have the light of day.

Many bands of music, and many other attractions, will be in the line. The parade will be held at 10 o'clock, and will start from the City Hall, and will march down the city streets to the harbor.

Roster of Parade.

The roster of the Building Trades Council will furnish many attractive features.

In dense white uniforms 1,000 members of laborers follow. It will have the light of day.

Many bands of music, and many other attractions, will be in the line. The parade will be held at 10 o'clock, and will start from the City Hall, and will march down the city streets to the harbor.

CRIME WAVE DUE TO THAW TRIAL, SAYS EVANGELIST

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 31.—(Special Telegram.)—A. A. Phelps, evangelist, says that a crime wave is due to the Thaw trial.

He says that the trial will be a great success, and that it will be a great success. The trial will be held at 10 o'clock, and will start from the City Hall, and will march down the city streets to the harbor.

Soon, Aye Very Soon, the Bell Ringeth to Call in the Straws

You May Be Able to Stick It Out for a Few Days, But What's the Use?

When the bell rings, the straws will be called in. The trial will be a great success, and it will be a great success. The trial will be held at 10 o'clock, and will start from the City Hall, and will march down the city streets to the harbor.

A Magazine of Many Features

As a rule, one feature (an article or story of unusual interest) is considered enough, but COSMOPOLITAN always has many features in each issue.

September COSMOPOLITAN is an excellent example of what its publishers are doing for its readers.

Bernard Shaw

the famous Irish playwright, says of the American Woman: "She has no conscience." "She has no sex." "The exploitation of women in America is a horror, it is hideous." "Englishwomen are more practical," and continues in a like strain in a very remarkable interview in September COSMOPOLITAN.

Alfred Henry Lewis

won his fame in fiction as the author of the most widely read and admired Western stories ever written—the "Wolfville" series. "The Rose of Wolfville" in September COSMOPOLITAN is a story of the rough, unpolished-diamond sort of love affair that begets lively times in Wolfville.

Chas. Edw. Russell

Some writers are able to make the driest, most uninteresting subject easy and fascinating reading. Charles Edward Russell is one of that rare kind of authors. But in September COSMOPOLITAN he takes hold of a timely, interesting subject and makes it read like a brilliant short story.

Jack London

Truth is stranger than fiction, and the facts of Jack London's wild, roving career are truly stranger than the strangest romance. In September COSMOPOLITAN Jack London tells more of his strange life—the life of a tramp who became a popular novelist.

Elbert Hubbard

Who does not know "Fra Eberhart" and his quaint philosophy? The reading public is at odds over him—one-half ardently admiring him, the other half with equal ardor detesting him. Which half do you belong to? Read his typically Hubbardque article in September COSMOPOLITAN.

Eliza Calvert Hall

is the author about one of whose "Aunt Jane" series of stories President Roosevelt, in his Laing address, said that it should be used "as a tract in all families where the men folk tend to disregard the rights of their womanhood." In the September COSMOPOLITAN is a new and especially interesting story of the "Aunt Jane" series.

Bruno Lessing

the "American Zangwill," has a particularly funny Ghetto story in September COSMOPOLITAN entitled "Sing Ho for Jadore Haimovitz." These Ghetto stories which Mr. Lessing has been writing exclusively for the COSMOPOLITAN for over a year past rank the author very high as a humorist.

And besides these there are many other splendid articles and stories of more than timely interest in Rome, Aug. 31.—Pope Pius X. is in the process of making the largest shake-up in the papal cabinet since the death of Pius IX. The pontiff is planning to make several changes in the papal secretariat of state. Cardinal Merry del Val, who will be transferred to the office of papal secretary of state, will succeed the late Cardinal Rampoldi, the papal secretary of state, who will succeed the late Cardinal Rampoldi as archbishop of Valencia.

The reason given for the proposed shake-up, but from those high in ecclesiastical office is that the entire movement is a part of the administrative reorganization of the papal government.

Cardinal Rampoldi, who has been in the papal secretariat of state for many years, is the most intimate friend of the pope. His removal is a significant move.

BODY WILL LIE IN STATE

Burial of Reverend Archbishop to Be in Crypt Under Cathedral.

HONORED in his last moments by the tender solicitude of Pope Pius X., Archbishop John Joseph Williams died at his post in this city, mourned by the Pope as well as by priests and public who were associates during his long life of achievement. It was announced last night that His Holiness the Pope learned while the great American prelate was yielding to a fatal illness that he himself was in a serious condition and called his blessing for the dying.

Another tribute from Rome was sent to Archbishop William H. O'Connell after the end came, and it was from Cardinal Merry del Val, the Papal Secretary of State. It read: "Sincere condolence on the Archbishop's death."

Within a few hours after the devoted soul had left its tenement of clay there poured in upon his successor a mass of grief from twelve American Archbishops, twenty-two Bishops and eleven leading clergymen who represented the hierarchy in every section of this country.

Another telegram of the same kind came from Rome, from the apostolic delegate to the United States.

Meanwhile all that was mortal of a great prelate of the Roman Catholic Church in America, one universally looked up to and loved as a priest and a man, was lying in a magnificent casket in the parlor of the archbishop's residence, on Church street, this city, where it was taken from the death chamber with tender, reverent hands last night.

Until then the remains of the churchman had remained in the little room upstairs which had been his chamber for more than a half-century, and, after half of years and honor, he had breathed his last at 3 o'clock on Friday.

All day long eminent Catholics and personal friends of the dead had called to pay their respects to the beloved features chilled by death. Meanwhile, the whole city was mourning the departure of one of its men who had been a blessing to a citizen.

Sorrow United All Creeds.

The grief in this country spread from coast to coast, and the highest testimony which could be offered to the virtues of this man, high priest of Boston, came in an outpouring of sorrow from all creeds and all sects when it came to commenting on his life and career.

Condolences came from every quarter from all parts of the United States and from every part of the world.
